About This Game

If your liked 2D clicker games, you will love this 3D one.

In this Open World, you will have to click as fast as possible to kill your enemies always coming stronger.

Protect your chest, collect bonuses by getting a path through a forest and evolve your sword and your axe to become stronger and progress faster.

This game has been thought to provide a great originality and replay value. Let you carry by wonderful music and an emotional story with a nice voice quality.

Originality

This game was created to show you a new kind of gameplay.

No more life bars for the trees, depending of their color, you will get an estimation of the time required to cut it.

Shields are really cumbersome, so, do not hesitate to use your hat on your head to protect you.

Weapons evolution will modify their shape depending of their previous appearance. From a simple stick, you will get a spear.

All enemies will evolve in the same way, taking into account the appearance of the previous shape.

Replay Value

You will get the feeling that all your games are different.

The life of all trees is random.

Dialogs will always be different and will be played randomly in different moment in the game.

When you get the feeling you are strong enough, do not hesitate to upgrade the game difficulty to see how far you can go.

QUICK THOUGHTS:

Clicker bAdventure starts out well enough but the further in you get, the more glaring the faults and glitches are. Level 7 ended without me advancing and no way to advance either (in fact I got stuck on a non-existent bridge while trying to figure it out and had to exit to the main menu which opened level 8 and 9 in the continue screen), choosing level 8 puts you in the middle of a battle with no way to restart if you die due to the mouse not appearing on the screen to select, and level 9 just drops you through the map. And I swear to god there are so many trees you'll spend half the time trying to find your character in them because he got stuck at one at some point you didn't even notice.

While a noble venture kind of worth playing for the integration of action rpg elements into a traditional clicker title, there's too many bugs and trees to make it worth your interest at this time. The music could be better/better expanded upon as well, not to mention the voice overs aren't that great, not to mention a bit inconsistent in audio quality. Hopefully Luminark continues to tighten the mechanics up as time goes on, and doesn't just abandon this project.. This was a great game for the sale price. There are some aspects that can be a little buggy but it's nothing that ruins the game. The movement controls is mouse only which can sometimes act a bit odd but didn't have much issue after getting used to it. I was able to complete every difficulty with little issue. Most important thing is getting upgrades. I read other reviews saying all you ever do is get one shot but if you get the hay bails and actually use the block, there is no issue with going up against any of the enemies. For higher difficulties I would say the laser tower is the hardest since it seems you just have to zerg it before you die, but still if you have axe upgraded and can get through trees quickly, this again isn't an issue.

For higher difficulties it definitely helps to be able to click very fast as it gives the recommended CPS anyway. If you aren't getting through something easily it may be good to practice on a lower difficulty. The greatest difficulty I had was actually dying. The last achievements I got were the death ones where you fail and have to restart the level and it took forever to wear the chest down until it was destroyed even when on warrior difficulty.

The story is a bit odd and the voice acting is pretty bad and lacks I guess any real emotion for what is happening in the story. Really I wouldn't be able to tell you what the story is really about even after multiple playthroughs. It needs a bit of work.

All in all would play again. Would be fun now that I know where everything is to see how fast I can speedrun the game.
. It is not clicker game.
